“ I remember being about 4 or 5 years old, gathering with my siblings (perhaps 4 of them, now I have 7 siblings) in my mother's room in front of the TV waiting to watch a movie. We all had been anticipating for a few hours the arrival of Aunt Connie, step sister to my mother Sarah Yé. It was rare that we saw her, and that perhaps made it feel all the more special, or perhaps it was my mother's excitement to see and catch up with Connie, or perhaps it was just being a child and being able to find joy in almost anything. In her car she pulled into the driveway, we ran to look out the window and shouted, repeatedly, "Aunt Connie is here, Aunt Connie is here!", and all ran to the door to meet her with big hugs and smiles. I think Connie was quite surprisingly overwhelmed, but returned the smiles and affection nonetheless. We were very happy to allow my mother to have time with her sister as we ran back to the TV. We missed some of the show, but we didn't mind, it was well worth it. Richard Yé
